Looking Down the Road at the China/North Korea Enigma

Tuesday, August 24, 2021 • 2-3 p.m. EDT

Register Here Now (passcode upf):

https://us-upf-org.zoom.us/meeting/register/tZctdO-sqjstHNwXrbWSgrAj9ypOMTDg2sPL

Or watch on Facebook: https://fb.me/e/5Bzrmh7o2

Mr. Douglas Bandow Senior Fellow, Cato Institute; analyst and commentator on China and the Asia Pacific in U.S. news media

Dr. Lyle Jared Goldstein Research Professor, China Maritime Studies Institute, Naval War College; author, Meeting China Halfway: How to Defuse the Emerging US-China Rivalry

Mr. Humphrey Hawksley Journalist, BBC and author, Asian Waters: The Struggle over the Indo-Pacific and the Challenge to American Power

Dr. Michael Jenkins (Moderator); President, The Washington Times Foundation; President, UPF International

Mao Tse-tung famously said China and the DPRK were "as close as lips and teeth." Is that still the case? Always on the minds of DPRK officials is the goal of having more economic (and political?) independence from China. In economic vitality and growth, China has more in common with South Korea than with the North. China and the DPRK are an odd couple, although they do share the important goal of not wanting a unified Korean Peninsula allied with the U.S. The question then is which parts of this complex relationship are in flux and how might China and the DPRK look to each other in 10 or 15 years?

Register Here Now (passcode upf):

https://us-upf-org.zoom.us/meeting/register/tZctdO-sqjstHNwXrbWSgrAj9ypOMTDg2sPL

Or watch on Facebook: https://fb.me/e/5Bzrmh7o2

Tuesday, August 24, 2021 + 2-3 p.m. EDT

